The PGMO will apply the Laws of the Game to manage rigorously the following incidents of bad behaviour with the following sanctions.

Dissent towards match officials

Yellow cards will be issued to players who:

Show visibly disrespectful behaviour to any match official

Respond aggressively to decisions

Confront an official face to face

Run towards an official to contest a decision

Offensive, insulting or abusive language and/or gestures towards match officials

Red cards will be issued to players who confront match officials and use offensive, insulting or abusive language and/or gestures towards them.

Physical contact with match officials

A yellow card for physical contact with any match official in a non-aggressive manner (e.g. an inquisitive approach to grab the official's attention).

A red card for physical contact with match officials in an aggressive or confrontational manner.

Surrounding match officials

A yellow card for at least one player when two or more from a team surround a match official.

The FA will continue to sanction teams when they surround match officials.

Conduct in the technical area

Behaviour by players and club staff in the technical area will be more rigorously enforced

The requirements of the Technical Area Code of Conduct will be more rigorously enforced for players and club staff.

Additionally, match officials will be required to retain professional detachment from players and club staff at all times.

Es wird über eine Winterpause nachgedacht 😊

www.independent.co.uk/sport/football/pre...weight-a7158381.html

But speaking on Wednesday, Guardiola denied suggestions that some of his players were overweight heading into pre-season.

"They were not overweight but I want my players fit," Guardiola told reporters on Wednesday.

"For me, the weight is so, so important. We need to run, to fight, to jump – to have the ball, after three days, then another three days, then another three days.

“When you are not fit, that’s when the injuries come."

Was war denn dann mit den Bayern Spielern 🤔
